

Editorial Independence and Transparency Policy

IPVarna Law Review is committed to upholding the principles of editorial independence, ensuring that all editorial decisions are made solely on the basis of academic merit, originality, and relevance to the field of Intellectual Property Law. The integrity of the peer review process and editorial decision-making is at the heart of our publishing ethics.

Editorial Independence

The Editorial Board of IPVarna Law Review operates independently and is not influenced by any commercial, institutional, or political interests. Manuscripts are selected for publication only after a thorough double-blind peer review process and based solely on their scholarly quality, legal soundness, and contribution to academic discourse.

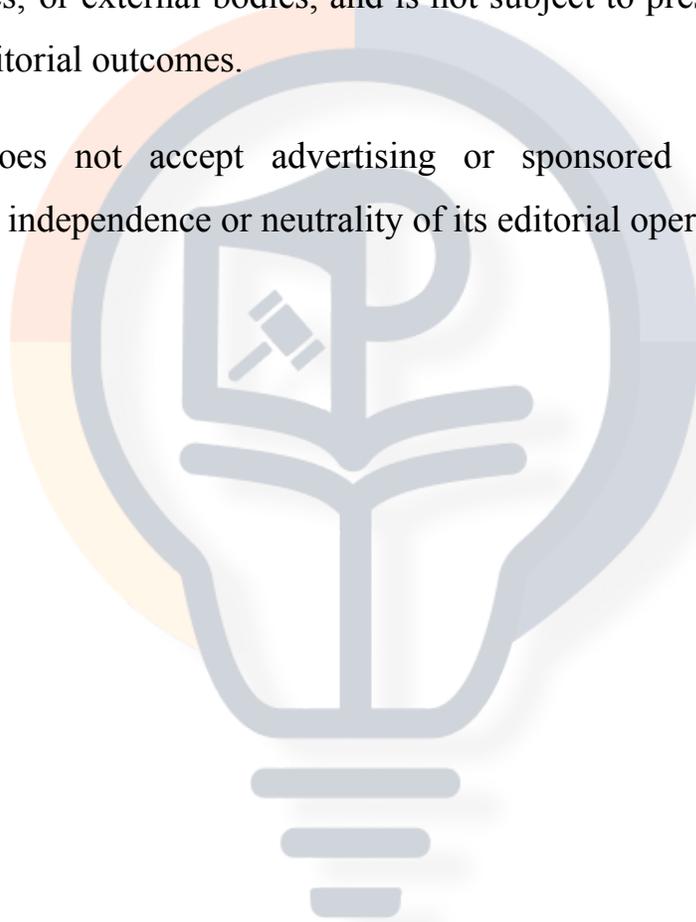

Financial considerations, including publication fees, sponsorship, or institutional affiliations, play no role in the acceptance or rejection of any submission. This ensures fairness to all contributors and maintains the journal's credibility in the academic and legal communities.

Independence from Publishers and External Influence

IPVarna Law Review affirms that its Editorial Board retains full authority over editorial content, including decisions related to the review, revision, and final acceptance of manuscripts. The editorial team is independent of any publishers, funding agencies, or external bodies, and is not subject to pressure or interference in relation to editorial outcomes.

The journal does not accept advertising or sponsored content that could compromise the independence or neutrality of its editorial operations.
