IPVarna Law Review charges a one-time publication fee upon acceptance of the manuscript. This fee is not charged at the time of submission and is only applicable to those manuscripts that have successfully completed the peer review process and are selected for publication.

The fee covers:

- Editorial processing and peer review management
- Professional formatting and proofreading
- Website maintenance and digital archiving
- Design, layout, and printing of the physical journal
- Shipping of print copies to the author(s)
- Administrative costs related to author correspondence and publication support

The current fees are as follows:

No additional charges are levied for editing, DOI assignment, or online access. All articles are published under an open access model and remain permanently available to readers without any subscription or download fees.

Funding Disclosure

To uphold academic integrity and transparency, all authors are required to disclose any financial support or institutional funding received in connection with the research or preparation of the submitted manuscript. This includes, but is not limited to, grants, fellowships, institutional sponsorships, or any third-party support.

Such disclosures must be included in the author details section of the submission form. This ensures that potential conflicts of interest are clearly identified and that the academic record remains trustworthy.
